Faced with the emergence of the information society, back in 1991, stakeholders in the Castre-Mazamet agglomeration realized the importance of information and communication technology issues for the planning and economic development of their territory. Furthermore, local businesses in the Castre-Mazamet basin, the second industrial pole of the Southern France/Pyrenees region, have an increasingly pressing need for communication media. This is explained, in particular, by their essentially industrial business which thus involves considerable national and international trade, hampered by the poor road links to the territory and a genuine lack of operators and infrastructures to cater for the needs of businesses and communities within the basin.

SUPPORT TO THE INFORMAL SECTOR: It is an acknowledged fact that there are in Africa men and women determined to take charge of their own lives and forge themselves a future in order to emerge from the socio-economic crisis afflicting the continent. The most committed of them manage, at best, to create small and medium-sized enterprises or industries, which is already a major feat, given the difficult context in which they are operating. The greatest obstacle for these apprentice businessmen and women is to get through the startup phase and make their project sustainable. COMMITMENT FOR SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT: Sustainable development is a watchword that is increasingly taking centre stage. Sustainable development is a clear priority objective with high mobilization potential.
