

Rory Macmillan is a partner in the Geneva office of the law firm Macmillan Keck. Rory regularly advises governments, regulators and several of the World's leading Internet and telecom companies on mobile digital financial services, network neutrality, over-the-top (OTT) service issues, data protection and privacy, as well as regular telecom regulation. He is currently co-leading statutory market reviews in mobile banking and retail banking in Kenya and Uganda.

Rory has drafted ICT laws in several countries, and arbitrated and mediated disputes between regulators and operators and among operators on interconnection and access deficits. Rory has advised extensively in Africa, the Middle East and Asia-Pacific on attracting investment and generating competition in mobile, fibre and submarine networks, including negotiating reforms, managing licence tenders and structuring public private partnerships (PPPs).

Before forming Macmillan Keck, Rory was an associate in the New York and London offices of Debevoise & Plimpton, where he advised on multi-billion dollar telecom operator privatisations and financings. Rory holds an LLM from the Yale Law School where he was a Fulbright and a Rotary Scholar, and his LLB with First Class Honours from the University of Edinburgh.
