

Daniel B. Cavalcanti is a Telecommunications Engineering professional with the Brazilian Government, currently a senior Policy Advisor at the National Telecommunications Agency – Anatel. Previously he worked as Project Manager at the Ministry of Communications. Over the last decade his work has focused on broadband policy and Internet related issues.

Mr. Cavalcanti's present work in government follows many years in the private sector as an engineer and senior manager in the telecommunications industry. He also taught university courses in the areas of Telecommunications Networks and Advanced Wireless Networks. Mr. Cavalcanti holds a M.Sc. in Electrical Engineering – Telecommunications from the University of Waterloo, Canada.