

Brian O'Shaughnessy

Is Bell Mobility's Vice-President of Wireless Technology, a position he has held since March 1995. In this position, Mr. O'Shaughnessy's is responsible for corporate technology planning and development, research and development and compliance to regulatory standards.

A recognized industry expert in the wireless communications field, Mr. O'Shaughnessy is the current President of CDMA Development Group (CDG), an organization responsible for the promotion, advancement, deployment and future developments of CDMA wireless systems

Prior to this appointment, Mr. O'Shaughnessy held several senior management positions within Bell Mobility and Bell Canada, including Director of Network Engineering and Director of Technology Planning.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy is passionate about nurturing future generations of engineers and entrepreneurs in Canada. He is Chairman of the Board of Directors of Shad International, a not-for-profit organization that runs a program to help top senior high school students from around the world to expand their scientific and technical knowledge and to develop their entrepreneurial skills.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy holds an electrical engineering degree from Queen's University and has been a licensed professional engineer (PEO) since 1985.